What do I aspire to become?

Well, to my thinking it is clear that I have dreams and aspirations and that I am trying my best to work for it. But I know that you curious minds might wonder; What is it that I really wish to become in the future? What do I really want to do with my life? I can assure you that I clearly know what I'm doing with my life and how I want to achieve my goals and I want to elaborate it to you. My purpose to give you a brief understanding of what my aspirations are and also quite possibly to confuse you with it.

When someone usually asks me this question, I often give myriad of different answers to different people. To some I tell that I want to be an international lawyer, to some I say an entrepreneur, or possibly a writer? a poet? Or an artist? But is that really true? Is that all that I aspire to become. The answer to it is quite simply a big 'NO'. I have plans, it isn't just that by being an international lawyer I can bring justice and change into this world. It is quite possible that in the due course of studying law, I take cooking lessons and become a master chef or join an art club and then start my career in arts. I could possibly do a diploma in International relations and become a diplomat or maybe I wish to become a member of the Parliament. Would that be in India or Abroad, well you would never know until I achieve my goals. It is possible that I publish books and become an author. But what type of books? What type of genre? It really depends on the trends of tomorrow.

In this bizarre world, where speed and time go hand in hand, I try my best to cope up with the speed so as to not fall short in achieving my goals. But my goals are set to change with the dynamic time. I might even have a job which doesn't exist today, a job which could exist possibly in the future. So once again what are my aspirations? Well I've not used a time machine and only God knows the future so only time will tell. Till then stay curious!
